Truk and Ponape in the Carolines, Marcus, the Marshall and Nauru Islands.

On October 9, 1944 the casualties of the fight for the Palaus were estimated to be: Japanese 11,380 dead, and 228 captured. Americans: 1105 dead, 6,439 wounded and 245 missing.

The Third Fleet penetrated to the Japanese home waters on October 9, 1944 to bombard the coastal batteries on Marcus Island, 1150 miles from Tokyo. On October 10 it attacked Okinawa and other islands of the Ryukyus, damaging 127 ships and small craft and 119 planes.

On October 9, 1944, elements of the U.S. 81st Infantry Division landed on Garakayo Island two miles north of Peleliu, and on the 11th occupied Bairakaseru Islet seven miles northwest, and Arimasuko on October 12.

On October 14, 1944 the Far Eastern Air Force made their fourth raid on the Japanese oil refineries at Balikpapan in southeastern Borneo.

On October 17, 1944, the Third Fleet attacked Luzon in its ninth day of sustained operations in the western Pacific.

The stage was now set for the invasion of the Philippines. The "Road Back" had become shorter.

Preparation for Invasion

On September 7, 1944 the Southwest Pacific Command began operations preparatory to an invasion of the Philippines. General Douglas MacArthur and the troops of the U.S. Sixth Army commanded by General Walter Krueger had been waging a successful fight against the Japanese troops "holed-up" in the Dutch New Guinea area and the Halmahera Islands.

The Southwest Pacific Command on September 7 moved in on Scepiori Island in Geelvink Bay. And on the 15th troops of the U.S. 31st Infantry Division and the 126th Infantry Regiment of the U.S. 32nd Infantry Division under command of General John C. Persons landed on Morotai, about 400 miles from the Philippines. Morotai was soon conquered, and as a result the Sixth Army had possession of air bases from which it could dominate our approach to the Philippines.

The first plan of our high command was to land on Mindanao Island in the Philippines in the month of November, but in our carrier plane sweeps over the Philippines it was discovered that the enemy in the central Philippines put up very little opposition, and the Filipino guerrillas gave us secret information that the enemy was weak in that area. It was then decided to advance the date of invasion to October 20, and that the first landing would be on Leyte Island.

The island of Leyte, in the central Philippines is situated about midway between the island of Luzon in the north and the island of Mindanao in the south.

The Battle of Leyte October 20, 1944–December 26, 1944

For the reconquest of the Philippines, the Central Philippine Attack Force was under the command of Admiral Thomas C. Kinkaid, and was composed of the Seventh Fleet greatly augmented by units of the Pacific Fleet. This large naval force was divided into the Northern Attack Force under command of Admiral Barbey, and the Southern Attack Force under command of Admiral Wilkinson. In addition, there were surface and air cover groups, fire support, bombardment, minesweeping and supply groups. The Attack Force comprised a total of more than six-hundred and fifty ships, including battleships, cruisers, destroyers, destroyer escorts, escort carriers, transports, cargo ships, landing craft, mine craft, and supply vessels. The mission of this Attack Force was to prepare the way and land four Army divisions on D-day.

The Third Fleet under command of Admiral Halsey was given the mission of covering and supporting the landing operations by long range air strikes at the enemy over Formosa, Luzon and the Visayas, and to protect the invasion forces from the Japanese Fleet that might be in hiding awaiting a favorable moment to attack.

For eleven days, October 9-20, 1944, preparatory flights and strikes were made in order to destroy enemy air and surface strength wherever found. A cruiser-destroyer task group bombarded Marcus Island on October 9 and damaged enemy installations. At the same time ships of another fast carrier force were approaching the Nansei Shoto (Ryukyu Islands) destroying enemy search and observation planes and picket boats so that our heavy forces might achieve a tactical surprise in the landing operation. Carrier aircraft attacked Okinawa Island in the Nansei Shoto on October 10, where the Japanese were taken by surprise and many of their ships were sunk and airfields damaged. Then came on October 12-13 an attack on Formosa and the Pescadores, where we found important air facilities, factories, warehouses, wharves, and much coastal shipping. Here we met stiff resistance. A large number of enemy planes opposed up and antiaircraft fire was intense. In spite of this opposition, on the first day we shot down 193 enemy planes and 123 more were destroyed on the ground. On October 13 an enemy air force damaged two of our cruisers, but they were taken in tow and returned safely to base for repairs. For six days from October 14 to 20 our carriers launched repeated fighter sweeps over Formosa, northern Luzon and central Philippines, destroying or neutralizing as much as possible every fragment of enemy power that might interfere with our plans for landing on Leyte. Even on October 20, the day of the landing, while some of our fast carriers furnished direct support to the landing operations, other fast carrier forces were conducting long range searches for units of the enemy fleet. In this way, the enemy power to prevent our initial assault on Leyte was neutralized.

The American pre-invasion air attacks on enemy installations in the Philippines were far more successful than was at first thought. After we had recaptured most of the islands in the Philippine Archipelago, General George C. Kenney, commander of the Far East Air Force declared that wrecks of nearly 3000 Japanese planes littered the airfields of the Philippines.

This explains why our initial landings were not so difficult as they might otherwise have been.

Leyte Landings

During the nine days of clearing the way, referred to above, our forces were assembling in the area, coming from all parts of the Pacific. For three days prior to the landing, the eastern entrance to Leyte Gulf had been secured; approach channels and landing beaches cleared of mines and reconnaissance of the main beaches had been made.

Troops of the X Corps and the XXIV Corps were landed on schedule on October 20, 1944. The landings were made without difficulty and were in every way successful.

Damages to our ships in these initial operations were as follows: YMS 70 was sunk in a storm, and tug Sonoma and LCI (L) 1065 was sunk by enemy action. On the 19th the destroyer Ross struck a mine and the light cruiser Honolulu was seriously damaged on the 20th by an aerial torpedo.

The Navy had convoyed and landed American troops on Leyte. Now the Navy was to protect our rapidly expanding beachheads from attack by sea and air, in

America Returns to the Philippines

On October 20, 1944, General of the Armies, Douglas MacArthur waded ashore on Leyte in the Philippines, accompanied by President Sergio Osmena of the Philippine Commonwealth. On the road back to the Philippines, MacArthur as head of the Southwest Pacific Command had relentlessly yet patiently fought his way through 2500 miles of land and water from Milne Bay in southern New Guinea.

On March 17, 1942, two years and seven months and nine days before, he had landed in Australia under orders from the President of the United States to organize and command a counteroffensive. When MacArthur left Corregidor in early March 1942 he left a message for the Filipino people, "I shall return." Now on October 20, 1944, stepping on shore at Leyte he issued a challenge to the Filipino people: "I have returned. Rally to me. Let the indomitable spirit of Bataan and Corregidor lead on!"

The United States Sixth Army had been given the task of invading, reonquering and occupying the Philippines. It consisted of the X Corps under command of General Franklin C. Sibert and the XXIV Corps under command of General John R. Hodge. The Army troops as well as Admiral Thomas C. Kinkaid's U.S. Seventh Fleet were under the direct control of General MacArthur, while Admiral Halsey's Third Fleet operated in direct support. The landing on Leyte had been prepared for by the heaviest concentration of air and naval power yet seen in the Western Pacific.

After the Navy's preparatory bombardment, the X Corps consisting of the 24th Infantry Division and the 1st Cavalry Division, landed south of Tacloban. The XXIV Corps consisting of the 7th and 96th Infantry Divisions, landed near Dulag. Beachheads were secured, deepened and widened.

Our troops pushed inland against rather light opposition from the Japanese 16th Division. The Americans captured Dulag on October 21 and Tacloban with its airfield on October 22, 1944, and now that the Leyte plain was in our possession, it looked for the moment as though the conquest of Leyte was near at hand. But the Japanese high command, realizing the importance to them of the Philippines, determined to reinforce the Leyte garrison. As a result a long drawn out battle for control ensued.

Then the rains began to fall in torrents. Tanks bogged down in deep mud, just as the

He trained at Laredo, Texas, and began overseas duty September, 1943, in North Africa. He participated in twenty-seven bombing missions over France, Italy, Germany, Bulgaria, Greece and other places. Sgt. McClung was reported "missing" January 11, 1944, on a mission over Greece, and was declared officially lost two years later. The Air Medal with three Oak Leaf Clusters and Purple Heart were awarded.

THE FIGHTING MEN OF TEXAS

Japanese were reinforced and became more menacing.

Additional American units were called into the Battle of Leyte: the 32nd Infantry Division, the 77th and 37th Infantry Divisions, the Americal Division, the 11th Airborne Division, the 112th Cavalry Regimental Combat Team, the 503rd Parachute Infantry Regiment, the 20th Armored Group, and the 1st Filipino Infantry.

The Japanese were all driven from southern and northeastern Leyte by October 30, 1944, with an estimated loss of 24,000 men. Still not willing to relinquish control of the island, the Japanese high command sent in additional troops as follows: the Japanese 34th Army consisting of the 1st, 30th and 102nd Divisions under command of General Tomoyuki Yamashita. In addition, new Japanese planes were brought into the fight from neighboring islands. Suicide attacks were made on American shipping in Leyte Gulf on November 14-December 7. Japanese paratroopers were landed near American airstrips at Tacloban in an attempt to destroy our planes and interrupt our air operations.

The American troops had tough going, and against such strong opposition, slow progress was made.

On December 6-7 the 77th Division executed an amphibious operation by landing three miles south of Ormoc, an operation which must have startled the enemy, for the Japanese attempted to bring in several transports into Ormoc Bay at the same time the Americans were landing on the shores of the bay. Six Japanese transports loaded with troops and supplies were sunk by our protecting force, and three additional transports were sunk northwest of Leyte the following day.

On December 11 the 77th Division captured Ormoc and made a junction with the 7th Division which had captured Albuera on the 10th. The 77th captured Cogon on December 16 and occupied Valencia on December 19th. The 1st Cavalry Division captured Kananga on December 20th.

Organized resistance on Leyte was declared at an end on December 26, 1944, but mopping up operations continued for many weeks.

The Japanese losses in Leyte are estimated to have been 54,833 killed and 493 taken prisoner.

The American losses were: 2623 killed in action, 8422 wounded, and 172 missing.

Extending Our Foothold During the progress of the fighting on Leyte, our forces whenever opportunity afforded, crossed over narrow straits to invade neighboring islands. A combat team of the XXIV Corps landed on Panaon Island just south of Levte.

Troops of the 1st Cavalry Division invaded Samar Island and secured solid beachheads on both sides of San Juanico Strait on October 30, 1944. The island of Samar had no enemy garrison, and its occupation was accomplished with comparative ease and there we found a well organized army of Filipino guerrillas ready and waiting to join with us in the fight against the common enemy.

On December 15 the Americans made a landing on Mindora Island, some two hundred miles northwest of Leyte, and in easy striking distance of Manila Bay and the island of Luzon.

The Second Battle of the Philippine Sea

The landing of the Americans on Leyte brought the crucial moment in Japanese history. It presented a challenge that could not be ignored. Japanese leaders had long insisted that possession of the Philippines was absolutely necessary for the perfect victory they hoped to achieve in their East Asia Co-Prosperity Sphere. So, the landing of the Americans brought the challenge: it was a case of fight new or never. On October 23, 1944 the Japanese Fleet came out from hiding and steamed forth into the jaws of death.

The advance of the Japanese Fleet brought on three naval engagements which taken together may be spoken of as the Second Battle of the Philippine Sea, although each was an important battle in itself. The Japanese Fleet moved out in three columns, southern and central and northern, and the three battles occurred almost simultaneously. As early as October 23 American planes and submarines had warned of the approach of the enemy fleet. The submarines Darter and Dace sank two heavy cruisers and our air force damaged two additional.

The Battle of Surigao Strait

Surigao Strait lies between Leyte Island and the northern tip of the island of Mindanao, lying to the south. In the early morning hours of October 25, 1944, the enemy's southern naval force, consisting of two battleships, one heavy cruiser and four destroyers, entered Surigao Strait. Admiral J. B. Oldendorff, in tactical command of the U.S. Seventh Fleet units so deployed his strength that the enemy was struck first by our PT boats, then by destroyer torpedo attacks, and finally by our heavy cruisers and battleships. This was what is known as "crossing the enemy's T," an expression with which navy men are familiar. Before the Japanese fleet could extricate itself from this trap, it lost two battleships and three destroyers. The remaining heavy cruiser was sunk by our planes on the following day. Thus the entire Japanese southern force was annihilated, while the U.S. Seventh Fleet sustaining damage to only one ship, the destroyer Albert W. Grant by enemy gunfire.

The Battle Off Samar

The central force of the Japanese Fleet headed eastward out of the China Sea for the Strait of San Bernardino lying between the northern tip of Samar Island and the extreme southern end of the island of Luzon. The enemy's central force consisted of five battleships, eight cruisers, and thirteen destroyers. While it was approaching its destination, it was encountered by U.S. Third Fleet carrier planes in the strait of Mindoro, far to the west of Leyte. These attacks sank the new Japanese battleship Mushashi, one cruiser and one destroyer, besides damaging other units. When the enemy fleet, still pursuing its eastward course, reached the coast of Samar, it had only four battleships, five cruisers, and eleven destrovers.

This still powerful enemy fleet struck a group of six American escort carriers, three destroyers and four destroyer escorts under command of Admiral C. A. F. Sprague. Our air force sank one enemy heavy cruiser and one destroyer, but in the surface engagement which followed the U.S. escort carrier Gambier Bay, the destroyers Hoel and Johnston and the destroyer escort Roberts were sunk by enemy gunfire. The escort carriers Suvanee, Santee, White Plains, and Kitkun Bay were damaged. And on the morning of October 25 enemy Kamikazes sank the escort carrier Saint Lo.

The Battle off Samar had a strange ending. The strong Japanese force after pounding a comparatively weak American force, suddenly broke off the engagement and retired through San Bernardino Strait, leaving the American transport fleet in Leyte Gulf unscathed. Planes from Admiral Sprague's remaining carriers and planes from the Third Fleet pursued the enemy and sank two additional enemy cruisers and one destroyer, while our battleships sank one cruiser, on October 26, 1944.

Lest We Forget

IN FLANDERS' FIELD

FIGHTING MEN OF

In Flanders' fields the poppies blow Between the crosses, row on row, That mark our place, and in the sky The larks, still bravely singing, fly, Scarce heard amidst the guns below. We are the dead. Short days ago We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow, Loved and were loved, and now we lie In Flanders' fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe, To you from falling hands we throw The Torch—be yours to hold it high; If ye break faith with us who die We shall not sleep, tho' poppies grow In Flanders' fields.

> (Written by Colonel John McCrae, of Guelph, Ontario, Canada, serving in France, 1917.)
